Now-closed Kentuckiana Medical Center

Hospital settles $3.6 million civil suit

By APRILE RICKERT

CLARKSVILLE — Management companies overseeing a recently-closed Southern Indiana hospital have agreed to pay $3.6 million to settle a civil suit alleging false claims and illegal financial arrangements.

Rialto Capital Management, LLC, and its former affiliate, RL BB-IN KRE, LLC, oversaw the Kentuckiana Medical Center before it closed in April. On Monday, the entities agreed to a settlement with the U.S. government for allegedly giving extended loans, by declining to pursue collecting owed monies after bankruptcy, to several doctors who had high referral rates to the hospital, according to a news release.

The civil suit, filed in U.S. District Court Southern Indiana, alleged that the defendants had violated the Anti-Kickback Statute, the Stark Law and the False Claims Act for declining to collect on the loans from the doctors, even when they were due in full, for continued referrals to the hospital.

Court records show that Drs. Eli Hallal, Christodulos Stavens, Renato LaRocca and Jeffrey Campbell are physicians named in the lawsuit as defendants; all were among the top referring doctors at the hospital, had served on the hospital board and directed the Kentuckiana Medical Center Real Estate Investors, Inc. (KMCREI.)

Hallal, Stavens and Campbell are also listed as owing roughly $9 million to the Kentuckiana Medical Center management company following bankruptcy, which Rialto allegedly continually declined to pursue collection on.

"When doctors refer patients for tests and medical procedures, they must do so based on their own professional judgment and the medical needs of their patients, not personal benefits," Assistant Attorney General Jody Hunt of the Department of Justice's Civil Division said in the release. "Illegal financial arrangements between health care providers undermine the integrity of our health care system, and we will continue to pursue those who engage in such conduct."

Undergrad in-state tuition to go up 2.5% at IU for next 2 years

By MICHAEL RESCHKE
(Bloomington) Herald-Times

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indiana University Board of Trustees unanimously approved increasing undergraduate tuition for Indiana residents by 2.5 percent on all campuses for each for each of the next two academic years. The rate exceeded the Indiana Commission for Higher Education's nonbinding recommended increase of 1.65 percent.

The board's decision came after a mandatory tuition forum at Indiana University-Purdue University Indianapolis on Wednesday. Members of the public were allowed to comment either in person or by submitting questions via email. No one took the opportunity to speak in person during the public comment period. Debbie Lemon, board secretary, said no questions were submitted online.

Reasons for the increases were included in a presentation IU Chief Financial Officer John Sejdinaj made during the tuition forum. The higher education price index, used to track the main cost drivers in higher education, increased 3.3 percent in 2107 and 2.8 percent in 2018. Sejdinaj estimated it will increase 2.6 percent in 2019.

Tuition is IU's primary source of revenue and employee compensation is its largest expense, but a 1 percent increase in tuition doesn't cover a 1 percent increase in salary costs, Sejdinaj said after the meeting.

"When you look at it all, this is what we felt was most important to move the university forward and provide the education students expect from IU," he said.

At $10,680 for in-state undergraduate tuition in 2018-19, IU was $440 below the national average for four-year doctoral institutions. IU was also below seven of its 14 Big Ten peers, but the approved increases will be $1,229.20 more than the cost at Purdue University for 2020-21.

IU's in-state rival has kept tuition nearly flat since 2013. A previously approved second installment of a fee increase for a new recreational center bumped Purdue up $10 for three years. University officials later determined the recreational center was covering its cost and removed the fee, leaving undergraduate tuition for Indiana residents at $9,992 since 2017. Purdue President Mitch Daniels is recommending no increase for the next two years. Purdue's board is scheduled to vote on the recommendation at a meeting next week.

Michael Mirro, chairman of the IU board, said simply comparing undergraduate tuition for Indiana residents at

About 31% of state's corn acres were planted by Sunday

By MAGEN KRITSCH
Daily Journal of Johnson County

The Franklin farmer usually has all 400 acres of his corn planted by mid-May.

This spring, the rain came. And came. And came, until April and May saw just as many rainy days as dry days.

Chris Hendricks hustled to plant his 400 acres of corn and 400 acres of soybeans over the weekend, finally getting most of his crops planted by the first weekend in June. He changed 25 acres of his crop from corn to soybeans to help make the corn planting deadline set by insurance companies to cover farmer's corn crops.

Farmers across Indiana and locally in Johnson County have felt the pinch and pressure to get corn planted by Thursday, which is the last day farmers have to get the seed in the ground so insurance companies will cover that crop.

Also looming is what subsidies they will get from the federal government to offset the impact of tariffs, but whether crops need to be planted by a certain date, and what that date is, is unknown.

Rain has made it difficult for farmers to make their insurance deadline and the number of planted crops is now far behind what Indiana has seen in the last five years.

About 31 percent of expected corn acres in Indiana had been planted by Sunday, which is the latest data available, according to data from the United States Department of Agriculture.

This time last year, 98 percent of Indiana's corn was planted. Soybeans are faring worse, with 17 percent planted now. Ninety percent was planted by the same time last year, according to the data.

An abnormally rainy planting season shortened the amount of time farmers could get out into their fields to do the work, Michael Dora, Indiana director for the United States Department of Agriculture, said.

"The field conditions are not correct and the farmers get half a day or a day and it rains again," he said.

May actually had a below average amount of rain in Franklin, with under five inches falling in May. The normal amount is more than 5.5 inches, Marc Dahmer, meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Indianapolis, said.

April in Franklin was rainier than usual, with more than six

Bevin's pension plan still short votes

FRANKFORT, Kentucky (AP) — Kentucky Gov. Matt Bevin still lacks enough votes to push his pension-relief bill through the state House, even with the changes he made to his proposal, House leaders said Thursday.

They said the tweaks to the bill didn't deal with the main sticking point for some lawmakers still withholding support for the governor's plan — ensuring that certain employees in the affected agencies have the option to keep their current benefits.

"We have offered proposed changes that we believe would give him sufficient votes to pass the measure," House Speaker David Osborne said in a statement.

The Republican governor has spent weeks trying to garner enough support to bring lawmakers back for a special legislative session to take up his measure. His plan would replace a measure the governor vetoed in April after the regular legislative session.

Bevin's proposal aims to provide relief for regional universities as well as county health departments, rape crisis centers and many other quasi-governmental agencies that face surging pension costs. On Wednesday, Bevin outlined four changes to his plan.

House Majority Floor Leader John "Bam" Carney said Thursday that "the vote count probably didn't move" as a result of those changes. It might have shored up support from some House members already leaning in favor of the measure, he said in an interview. "But as far as getting him over the top, I don't think it's done that," Carney said.

The measure appears to remain "a couple of votes short" in the House, he said.

Another complication for the governor is trying to schedule a potential special session amid lawmakers' long-planned vacations. The vote count is fluid, depending on which lawmakers would be absent in certain weeks because of vacations, Carney said.

"That really is a part of the equation right now," Carney said. "It's literally that close in terms of the votes."

Unless action is taken, the regional universities and quasi-public agencies face ballooning pension costs on July 1. State leaders worry that inaction would strain the quasi-public agencies and lead to some bankruptcies, elimination of staff and loss of critical services for Kentuckians.

Bevin's proposal allows the agencies to stay with the Kentucky Retirement Systems at full cost; leave the retirement system by paying a lump sum equal to future projected benefits payments; or buy their way out in installment payments over 30 years. It extends a freeze on pension costs for another year for the regional universities and quasi-public agencies.

The main concern is ensuring that employees of the affected groups are given the option to retain their current benefits if they have been in the state plan since 2013, top House leaders said. House Minority Floor Leader Rocky Adkins said the governor's changes to the pension proposal didn't win over any of his fellow House Democrats.

Adkins also urged Bevin to agree to a freeze in the pension costs for the affected universities and quasi-public agencies, allowing lawmakers to consider a pension proposal next year.

3 deer crash through window, trap woman

DECATUR, Indiana (AP) — Police rescued a woman after three deer crashed through a window, trapping her inside her apartment with the skittish animals. Decatur police say the 74-year-old woman was in her retirement home apartment Tuesday night when the deer crashed through a bedroom window. The woman called 911. Officers found her trapped on her living room couch, with her walker knocked over, as one deer jumped about the room. Sgt. Kevin Gerber says an officer shielded the woman after that deer knocked her over. Gerber said officers subdued and removed one deer. He said two others that ended up in a bathroom were tranquilized and released. He said the woman wasn't injured and "was amazingly calm" but the deer heavily damaged her apartment.

Evansville vet buried at Arlington on D-Day anniversary

Indiana

ARLINGTON, Virginia — A decorated World War II veteran from Indiana who died in March was buried at Arlington National Cemetery on the 75th anniversary of the D-Day invasion he took part in. Carl Mann died March 30 at age 96. The Evansville Army veteran's wartime heroism earned him a final resting place at the Virginia cemetery, where about 40 friends and relatives attended Thursday's military burial. Mann was among the Allied troops who stormed Omaha Beach in Nazi-occupied northern France during the D-Day invasion on June 6, 1944. His wartime service earned him three Purple Hearts and seven Bronze Stars. Mann's youngest son, Miles Mann, told the Evansville Courier & Press his father would have been honored, humbled and embarrassed to be buried at Arlington National Cemetery on the D-Day anniversary.

Indy police arrest 24 after cellphone thefts

INDIANAPOLIS — Twenty-four people have been arrested after a string of robberies in Indianapolis where cellphones were taken. The police department said in announcing the arrests that the group of suspects faces a total of 31 felony charges and 11 misdemeanors. The investigation is ongoing.

Word of the arrests comes after police officials, the FBI Violent Crimes Task Force and the Indianapolis mayor's office met Wednesday to discuss efforts to curb cellphone thefts. They were joined by others including security teams from cellphone providers Verizon, T-Mobile, AT&T and MetroPCS.

Officials say cellphone businesses are working to strengthen security measures to discourage theft and are committed to working with law enforcement on investigations.

Prison avoided in 2016 boat crash that killed 2

CROWN POINT — An Indiana man who pleaded guilty in a 2016 Lake Michigan boat crash that killed two passengers has avoided prison time in the case. Tony Gibson, 39, earlier entered the plea to two counts of reckless homicide in the deaths of Richard Wade, 68, of Hammond, Indiana, and Timothy Dunlap, 62, of Lynwood, Illinois. Gibson apologized Thursday, saying he doesn't know why he survived. The (Northwest Indiana) Times reported Gibson was ordered to serve 1½ years in a work-release program followed by 1½ years of probation. Prosecutors say Gibson was intoxicated in July 2016 when the 42-foot (12.8-meter) powerboat he was operating crashed into a break wall near an East Chicago, Indiana, marina. Records say Wade and Dunlap were found dead in the water and Gibson was found walking barefoot on land.

City gets $300K for industrial sites

SULLIVAN — The City of Sullivan has landed a $300,000 federal grant to combat contamination at several old industrial sites. Officials with Sullivan plan to use some of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency funding to investigate potential environmental contamination at up to 10 properties, including vacant filling stations and a dry cleaner. The funding will also give a boost to redevelopment efforts that Mayor Clinton Lamb says will provide "a very important economic tool." The Tribune-Star reported the EPA said the agency's grants to address so-called "brownfields" have been shown to boost local tax revenue and property values. The EPA said one study of 48 brownfield sites found that an estimated $29 million to $97 million in additional local tax revenue was generated in a single year after cleanups.

Name post office for Lugar, officials ask

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana's congressional delegation is seeking to put former U.S. Sen. Richard Lugar's name on a downtown Indianapolis post office. All nine House members and both senators have joined together on legislation naming the postal branch a few blocks north of Monument Circle in the city where Lugar was mayor before his 36-year Senate tenure. The proposal follows Lugar's death in April at age 87. Sen. Mike Braun said Lugar should be honored as among the greatest statesmen ever to serve in the Senate. Lugar was lauded for his working helping spur the post-Cold War dismantling of thousands of former Soviet nuclear weapons. The federal courthouse in downtown Indianapolis was named in 2003 for Sen. Birch Bayh, who died in March.

Louisville officer charged with bribery, misconduct

LOUISVILLE — A Louisville police officer has been indicted on charges of bribing a public servant, unlawfully accessing a computer and official misconduct. The Courier Journal reported 30-year-old Officer William Garrett was indicted Thursday and a warrant was issued for his arrest. Specifics about what prompted the charges are unclear. An arraignment is set for Monday. Spokeswoman Alicia Smiley says Garrett began working for the department in 2013 and has since resigned. She declined to give further details. Garrett was charged in March 2018 with fourth-degree assault, unlawful imprisonment and intimidating a participant in the legal process. He pleaded guilty last year to twice violating an emergency protective order. He was charged in December with shoplifting and has pleaded not guilty.

2.4 earthquake reported near Kevil, no damage

KEVIL — The U.S. Geological Survey said a magnitude 2.4 earthquake occurred in Kentucky along the New Madrid fault line. News outlets reported the quake was northeast of Kevil shortly after 6:30 p.m. Thursday. There were no reports of damage. The USGS at the University of Memphis said the quake was centered 4.1 miles northeast of Kevil and 12.7 miles west-northwest of Paducah. The USGS said at 2.5, humans are able to detect the ground shaking, but there were some reports of the quake being felt in neighboring Marshall County. A series of powerful earthquakes occurred along the fault line beginning in 1811, including one with an estimated magnitude of 7.7.

Teen arrested in deadly shootings at party

WHITESVILLE — Police have arrested a Kentucky teenager on charges of killing two people and wounding a third during a party. The Owensboro Messenger-Inquirer reported the 17-year-old was arrested Thursday in Owensboro. His name was not released because he is a juvenile. A warrant charged him with two counts of murder and one count of second-degree assault. Killed Saturday in Whitesville were Amarius Winstead, 16, and Jasper Brown, 18. Tyler Glover, 19, was also shot and underwent surgery. Daviess County Sheriff Keith Cain said the investigation is continuing.

Water utility granted emergency rate hike

FRANKFORT — A water utility has been granted an interim emergency rate increase that will set a flat rate amounting to a 42 percent hike for typical residential customers. The Kentucky Public Service Commission said in a news release it granted the increase Thursday to Southern Water and Sewer District in Floyd County. The utility said it has been losing $40,000 to $50,000 a month and couldn't stay in business without an emergency increase.

The flat rate was set at $58.82 per month, an increase of $17.42 for a typical residential customer. Refunds could be issued if rates are lowered after an analysis. The PSC said some of the utility's meters register no use, and it has no replacements. The PSC rejected the utility's increase request in January, citing lack of financial information. Southern Water has about 5,450 customers.

Clancy's Dream

Organization provides safe haven to rescue border collies

By MARK WEBBER
The Republic

An organization providing a safe haven for high risk and unwanted border collies has expanded its services to care for some of the most seriously ill of the breed around southeastern Indiana.

Border collies suffering with cancer, as well as the emotional well-being of the owners who care for them, will benefit from a fundraiser in Columbus later this month.

A 5K walk/run, sponsored by a new division of Clancy's Dream, Inc., will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday, June 29 at Noblitt Park in Columbus.

In addition to walkers and runners, organizers are encouraging dog owners to participate by bringing their pets to the event for a casual walk.

Clancy's Dream is a border collie rescue organization operating out of Dogwood Ridge Farm, on Heathers Pass a few miles from Lutheran Lake near the Bartholomew/Brown County line.

Founded by Kenny and Elaine Shuck, Clancy's Dream has been a registered tax-exempt charity since 2016 that provides rescue, medical, rehabilitation and adoption assistance for at-risk border collies, according to its website.

The charity's newest division to help dogs with cancer, known as the Nellie Effect, was founded last fall through a $5,000 grant from the Greenfield-based Elanco Animal Health Inc., Shuck said.

Cancer in border collies is most often terminal, said Lou Anne Denny, who says she's still grieving for the loss of her pet, Jake, to a brain tumor last Valentines Day.

But there is hope for many dogs with cancer, Shuck said. For example, his organization paid for chemotherapy for a border collie with cancer that survived nearly three years after being diagnosed with cancer, he said.

Although heartworm is usually considered fatal, Shuck said Clancy's Dream has paid for the successful treatment of five dogs with that condition, including one of his own pets named Doc.

While Denny says her heart isn't ready to permanently adopt another pet right now, she and her husband, Doug, agreed two weeks ago to work through Clancy's Dream to become foster parents to Casey, a black and white border collie who exhibits extreme nervousness.

"He's just learning how to play," Denny said. "At first, he didn't even know what a toy was. But he's come a long way in just a few weeks."

Denny hopes to determine within a month or two whether she and her husband want to permanently adopt Casey, she said.

Clancy's Dream, Inc. consists of a board of directors that meet monthly, as well as 34 fosters and volunteers throughout Indiana, that work to save as many at-risk border collies as possible, Kenny Shuck said.

Upon arrival at the rescue facility, all border collies are brought up-to-date on vaccinations, spayed/neutered, and receive any other needed medical care.

No medical cost is ever passed along, no fee is charged for adopting a dog, and 100 percent of all donations go toward saving dogs, according to the website.

Known for their intelligence and determination to please their masters, the fictional portrayal of border collies in such movies as the popular 1995 film "Babe" resulted in an increased demand for the breed, Shuck said.

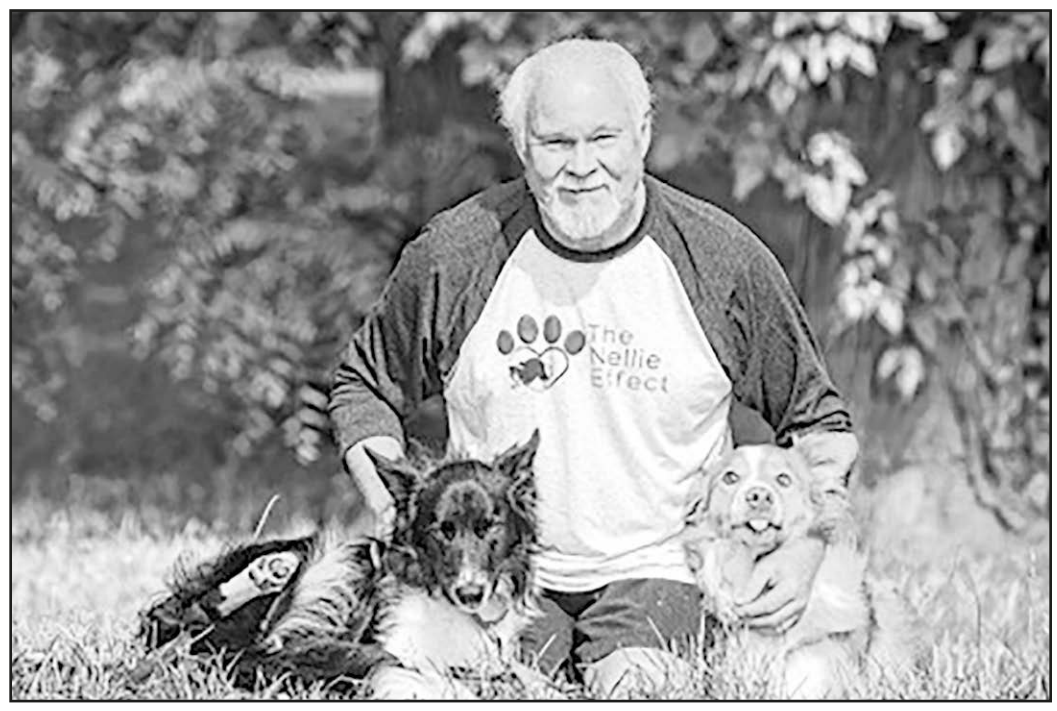
While he and his wife used to breed border collies, Shuck said the couple stopped in 2013 after learning the dogs were often being turned in at shelters and even euthanized because people were not familiar with their needs.

"We wanted to be part of the solution and not the problem," said Shuck, who worked five years as an assistant to a Louisville veterinarian.

What many people don't understand about border collies is that they can develop serious behavioral problems if unable to work off their energy.

The owner of a border collie needs to provide his pet with at least two hours of exercise and mental stimulation a day to ensure a good-tempered dog, according to Shuck.

Since their herding instinct can be directed at anything that moves, a border collie's behavior is often interpreted as nervous, neurotic or even dangerous if the dog tries to herd moving vehicles or cyclists.



Kenny Shuck poses for a portrait with borden collies Kasey, left, and Doc, right, at Noblitt Park June 4, 2019. Shuck and his wife Elaine operate Clancy's Dream Border Collie Rescue in Brown County. The organization created a new division called The Nellie Effect to help people in Indiana who have dogs with cancer pay for their treatment or end of life care. The organization is hosting a 5K walk/run to help fund The Nellie Effect. (Photo byMike Wolanin, The Republic)

The namesakes of both the Clancy's Dream and the Nellie Effect organizations were both border collies trained as therapy dogs. Clancy was the alpha male of a large group of canines at Dogwood Ridge Farm until he died unexpectedly at the age of 10 in 2016.

One of Clancy's daughters was Nellie, who was sent to reside near Connersville at a facility that specializes in training border collies how to herd sheep. Nellie, who brought smiles to many sick kids as a service dog at Riley Children's Hospital in Indianapolis, died last fall of gastric cancer, Shuck said.

"Together, Nellie and Clancy will save dogs — even in their death," Shuck said.

Indiana legislators want nation to address school bus safety

By ANDY BELL-BALTACI
Daily Journal of Johnson County

Two U.S. legislators representing Indiana want federal laws that would standardize penalties for drivers who ignore school bus stop arms.

U.S. Sen. Todd Young, R-Indiana, and U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski, R-2nd District, were inspired to fight for a federal review of school bus safety laws after three children were killed by a driver who ignored an extended stop arm and struck them in Rochester last year, they said.

The accident happened in Walorski's district, and she wants the tragedy to be a catalyst for national action, she said.

"It's unbelievable. There's so much blatant disregard for school bus laws. The arms were out, the lights were on. It's a tragedy I hope no one experiences," Walorski said.

"When you get behind the wheel, every driver needs to be cautious. Never pass when the lights are flashing and the arm is extended."

The Stop for School Buses Act will appear in both the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives pending a review by the Committee of Transportation Infrastructure. Both Young and Walorski believe they have enough bipartisan support to pass the bill and send it to President Donald Trump's desk to be signed into federal law, they said.

The bill would allow the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration to conduct a study of state laws and practices, after which the two lawmakers would craft a second bill, using those findings to suggest a national standard for school bus safety and penalties for drivers who break the law, Walorski said.

The entire process should be complete within one to two years, she said.

Indiana has already taken action when it comes to school bus safety. On May 30, Gov. Eric Holcomb signed Senate Bill 2 into law. The law, which takes effect July 1, increases the penalty from a Class A misdemeanor to a Level 6 felony for drivers who recklessly pass a school bus while its stop arm is extended. Courts can also suspend the driver's license of someone who violates the law for 90 days. For a driver who has a previous violation on their record, that penalty increases to one year.

About the federal proposal: Federal legislation that would call for a study of state laws and practices concerning vehicles that pass stopped school buses.

New state law: Senate Bill 2 increases the penalty for recklessly passing school buses from a Class A misdemeanor to a Level 6 felony. Drivers who do can have their license suspended 90 days to a year for repeat offenders.

The law bans school bus drivers from making children cross a U.S. or state road to board a bus unless there are no other safe alternatives. The law also requires the Indiana Department of Transportation to post school bus safety guidelines on its website.

Drivers pass stopped school buses routinely, according to data from the department of transportation, which asks school bus drivers to keep a tally of drivers who violate the law one day each year.

On that day in 2018, 7,740 buses participated, counting 3,104 violations. In Johnson County, 245 drivers participated, noting 71 violations.

Despite stiffened penalties, school bus drivers still need to give police license plate numbers in order for drivers who break the law to face consequences. Rochester schools are already using stop arm cameras in order to capture footage of drivers who pass their buses while they're stopped. Schools in Johnson County have not yet added the cameras on school bus stop arms.

Federal legislation will provide peace of mind for parents who send their children to school on the bus, Young said.

"We concluded it's time to act more seriously and boldly to address this issue," Young said. "It's something that's every parent's nightmare, sending our children off to school on what we believe are safe school buses and we charge others with the safety of our children. My heart breaks for those in Rochester and we can't allow it to happen again."

Social Security error puts Medicare coverage in jeopardy

By SUSAN JAFFE
Kaiser Health News

At least a quarter of a million Medicare beneficiaries may receive bills for as many as five months of premiums they thought they already paid.

But they shouldn't toss the letter in the garbage. It's not a scam or a mistake.

Because of what the Social Security Administration calls "a processing error" that occurred in January, it did not deduct premiums from some seniors' Social Security checks and it didn't pay the insurance plans, according to the agency's "frequently asked questions" page on its website. The problem applies to private drug policies and Medicare Advantage plans that provide both medical and drug coverage and substitute for traditional government-run Medicare.

Some people will discover they must find the money to pay the plans. Others could get cancellation notices. Medicare officials say approximately 250,000 people are affected.

Medicare and Social Security said they expect proper deductions and payments to insurers will resume this month or next. Insurers are required to send bills directly to their members for the unpaid premiums, according to Medicare.

But neither agency would explain how the error occurred or provide a more exact number or the names of the plans that were shortchanged. The amount the plans are owed also wasn't disclosed. A notice to beneficiaries on Medicare's website lacks key details.

Rep. Richard Neal (D-Massassachusetts), who chairs the House Ways and Means Committee, and two colleagues wrote to both agencies about the problem on May 22 but have not received a response from Medicare. Social Security's response referred most questions to Medicare officials.

Organizations that help seniors say they are getting some questions from Medicare beneficiaries. Two seniors in Louisiana lost drug coverage after their policies were canceled because of the SSA error, said the state's Senior Health Insurance Information Program (SHIIP) director, Vicki Dufrene. One woman had had the same drug plan since 2013, and it dropped her at the end of April. She was without coverage for the entire month of May until earlier this week, when Dufrene was able to get her retroactively re-enrolled.

Dufrene said some people might not notice that their checks did not include a deduction for their Medicare Advantage or drug plan premiums. If their check was a little more than expected, they could have assumed that extra amount was the expected cost-of-living increase, among other things.

In Ohio, a Medicare Advantage plan reinstated a member due to unpaid premiums less than 48 hours after the state's SHIIP got involved, said director Christina Reeg.

Medicare beneficiaries have had the option of paying their premiums through a deduction from their Social Security checks for more than a decade, she said. However, they can also charge payments directly to a credit card or checking account instead of relying on Social Security.

Humana spokesman Mark Mathis said about 33,000 members were affected — or fewer than 1 percent of its total Medicare membership. None of those members lost coverage. The company blamed Medicare's nearly 15-year-old IT systems for the failure and urged the agency to invest in new equipment.

A UnitedHealthcare representative said none of its 32,000 Medicare Advantage or Part D members affected by the SSA problem lost coverage. The company has the highest Medicare enrollment in the U.S. Aetna has not received payments for Medicare Advantage and drug plans for the months of February through May for 43,000 affected members, said spokesman Ethan Slavin. Customers will receive bills for the unpaid premiums and can set up payment plans if they can't pay the entire amount.

These and other affected insurers must allow their members at least two months from the billing date to pay. And they must offer a payment plan for those who can't pay several months of premiums at once, Medicare said. With both steps, "plans can avoid invoking their policy of disenrollment for failure to pay premiums while the member is adhering to the payment plan," Jennifer Shapiro, the acting director for the Medicare Plan Payment Group, warned the companies in a May 22 memo.

Lindsey Copeland, federal policy director for the Medicare Rights Center, an advocacy group, said she is concerned that older adults will view the bill with suspicion. "If you think your premiums are being paid automatically and then your plan tells you six months later that wasn't the case, you may be confused," she said.

Churches wipe out millions in medical debt for others

By ROXIE HAMMILL
Kaiser Health News

The leaders of Pathway Church on the outskirts of Wichita, Kansas, had no clue that the $22,000 they already had on hand for Easter would have such impact.

The nondenominational suburban congregation of about 3,800 had set out only to help people nearby pay off some medical debt, recalled Larry Wren, Pathway's executive pastor. After all, the core membership at Pathway's three sites consists of middle-income families with school-age kids, not high-dollar philanthropists.

But then they learned that, like a modern-day loaves-and-fishes story, that smaller amount could wipe out $2.2 million in debt not only for the Wichita area but all available debt for every Kansan facing imminent insolvency because of medical expenses they couldn't afford to pay — 1,600 people in all.

As Wren thought about the message of Easter, things clicked. "Being able to do this provides an opportunity to illustrate what it means to have a debt paid that they could never pay themselves," he said. "It just was a great fit."

Churches in Maryland, Illinois, Virginia, Texas and elsewhere have been reaching the same conclusion. RIP Medical Debt, a nonprofit organization based in Rye, New York, that arranges such debt payoffs, reports a recent surge in participation from primarily Christian places of worship. Eighteen have worked with RIP in the past year and a half, said Scott Patton, the nonprofit's director of development. More churches are joining in as word spreads.

The mountain of bills they are trying to clear is high. Medical debt contributes to two-thirds of bankruptcies, according to the American Journal of Public Health. And a 2018 Kaiser Family Foundation/New York Times poll showed that of the 26 percent of people who reported problems paying medical bills, 59 percent reported a major life impact, such as taking an extra job, cutting other household spending or using up savings. (Kaiser Health News is an editorially independent program of the foundation.)

The federal Consumer Financial Protection Bureau proposed a rule last month to curb debt collectors' ability to bug those with outstanding bills, and some states have tried various measures, such as limiting the interest rates collectors may charge. But until a comprehensive solution emerges, churches and others are trying to ease some of the load by jumping into the debt market.

A big part of RIP's appeal comes from the impact even a small donation can have, say participating church leaders. When a person can't pay a bill, that debt is often packaged with other people's debt and sold to bill collectors for some fraction of the total amount of the bill. Those debts usually come from low-income people and are more difficult to collect.

RIP Medical Debt buys debt portfolios on this secondary market for pennies on the dollar with money from its donors. But instead of collecting the debt, RIP forgives it.

To be eligible for repayment from RIP, the debtor must be earning less than twice the federal poverty level (about $25,000 a year for an individual), have debts that are 5 percent or more of their annual income and have more debt than assets.

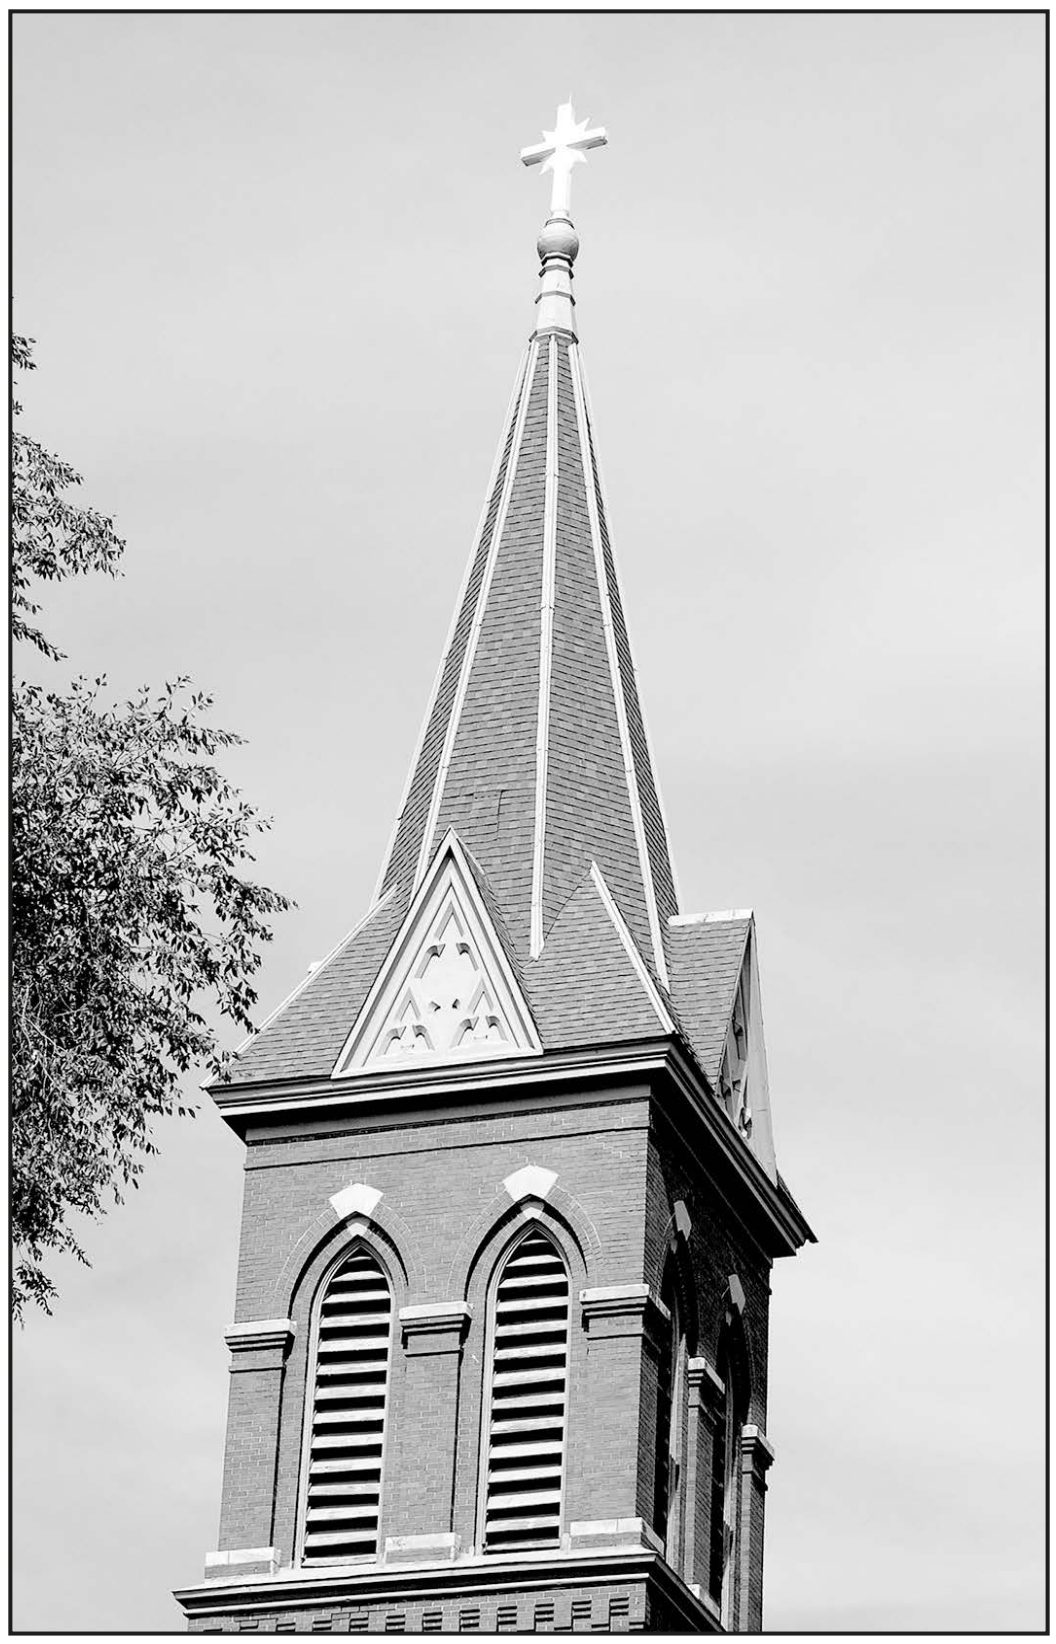
Because hospitals and doctors are eager to get those hard-to-collect debts off their books, they sell them cheap. That's how, Patton said, those 18 churches have been able to abolish $34.4 million of debt since the start of 2018.

Working this way puts a high-dollar project within reach of even small churches. Revolution Annapolis, a nondenominational Maryland church with Sunday attendance of around 200 and without a permanent building, wiped out $1.9 million in debt for 900 families in March. Total amount raised: $15,000.

Revolution leaders heard about RIP Medical Debt on a segment of John Oliver's "Last Week Tonight" in 2016, said Kenny Camacho, lead pastor. But at the time, they didn't think they had the resources to make much of a splash.

After hearing about another church that paid off millions last year, Revolution leaders decided to try it. At most, they hoped to have an impact in their area, Camacho said. But the money went much further, eventually covering 14 counties in eastern and central Maryland.

Emmanuel Memorial Episcopal Church, a congregation of about 175 families in Champaign, Ill., had a similar experience. The original idea was to try to have an impact just in Champaign County, said the Rev. Christine Hopkins. But their $15,000 abolished $4 million of debt for the entire diocese, which stretches across the southern half of the state.



"We were bowled over, actually," Hopkins said. "It was to the point of tears."

In many cases, churches have not had to do a fundraising campaign because their contribution came from money already on hand. Emmanuel Episcopal, for instance, had leftovers from a campaign set up a year ago to celebrate the centennial of its church building.

The Fincastle Baptist Church, with 1,600 members in the Roanoke, Va., area used money it had budgeted for an annual "Freedom Fest" event to honor first responders, and then partnered with local television station WSLS in a telethon to raise more. That effort abolished over $2.7 million in medical debt targeted at veterans.

The RIP nonprofit allows donors to choose geographic areas they want to reach and can pinpoint veterans as recipients. But beyond that, no restrictions are allowed, Patton said. A church can't specify which types of medical procedures could be paid for or anything about the background of the recipients.

That didn't bother church leaders contacted for this story. But it is a subject that's been broached by donors of all types in the past, Patton said.

For instance, some potential donors have asked to exclude people from different faiths or certain political parties, he said. "It's just absurd. This is not a revenge tactic," Patton said. "People who are requesting those things really don't understand philanthropy."

Churches don't necessarily experience a direct return in the way of new members. All the processing goes through RIP Medical Debt, which sends letters notifying the beneficiaries their debts have been forgiven. Donors can have their names listed on those letters, but not everyone opts to do so.

New membership wasn't the point for Pathway Church in Kansas, Wren said. "Sometimes the more powerful spiritual message is when you're able to do something for somebody that you'll never meet."

The Revolution Church decided against putting its name on the notification letters, Camacho said, because it didn't want beneficiaries to feel obligated. "When a person has their debt forgiven, we want them to experience that as a kind of no-strings-attached gift," he said. "We don't want there to be any sense that because we did this now they should visit our church or something."

Besides, he said, the gift covered an area large enough that some beneficiaries live a couple of hours away. "I would much rather them think more positively about the church down the street from where they live."

Donors sometimes hear back from the people whose debts they've paid, but not often. Many don't expect it. "I guess that's a biblical story, too. Jesus forgave 10, and only one said thank you," Hopkins said.

Churches have a lot of choices when it comes to charity, but medical debt and affordability issues often resonate with parishioners. Some churches are worried enough about medical costs for their members that they subscribe to cost-sharing nonprofits, in which members pay each other's medical bills.

Medical mission work has long been an important form of outreach for Fincastle Baptist Church in Virginia, said associate pastor Warren King. The church runs a free clinic, and mission trips to other countries usually include a medical component.

Paying off medical debt is an extension of that line of thinking. "We need to do not just this thing but many things that practically show the love of God," King said. "It's hard to tell somebody God loves you if they're starving and you don't try to deal with the problem."

Hopkins said the debt outreach was a satisfying project for her Illinois congregation because it could resolve a problem for the beneficiaries. "We do a lot of outreach that's food-related and housing-related. This was something different," Hopkins said. "You help feed somebody, and you're feeding them again the next day. This was something that could make an impact."

RiverLink is the toll system in Louisville. All-electronic tolling means no toll booths, no lines and no stopping. (From the Kentucky Transportation Department website)

The cost of that toll? Depends on your E-ZPass

By ELAINE S. POVICH
Stateline • stateline.org

Zipping along the Massachusetts Turnpike, unsuspecting tourists from other states encounter an electronic toll plaza. No problem: The transponder they bought in their home state registers the toll and deducts the amount from the account.

But what most travelers don't know is that the charge is almost $2 more than if they had purchased the device in Massachusetts.

Some 50 million Americans are expected to hit the roads this year, mostly during the summer tourism season.

The number of toll roads is increasing, and in many states, drivers who bought their transponders elsewhere get charged what's called the cash rate, a higher amount they'd pay if they had to queue up and hand over bills and coins. Most of the time, drivers don't even know it — raising questions about government transparency.

In response to a query from Stateline, E-ZPass Executive Director P.J. Wilkins said his organization has nothing to do with setting toll rates — that's up to individual states.

"Each state provides a discount, or doesn't provide a discount," he said in a phone interview. "They set their own rules. We're not in that part of their business. The area where those discounts occur for their own E-ZPasses is mainly in the Northeast."

In Connecticut, a proposal from Gov. Ned Lamont, a Democrat, to institute all-electronic tolling like most New England states is headed for a special legislative session, according to the Hartford Courant.

Lower prices for in-state transponders are "an incentive to buy a transponder in a certain state," said David Elder, transportation planner at the Connecticut Department of Transportation. It's also a "way to make tolling more palatable for elected officials. They can say residents and commuters aren't going to pay as much as someone from out of state using our facility."

States have long had one rate for cash and a lower one for electronic charges registered by a transponder, a small plastic device stuck to the windshield that registers tolls. An E-ZPass is just one type, and it is used by 17 states, mostly in the Northeast.

But with the burgeoning number of "E-ZPass Only" roads or exits, some states came up with a new way to set different toll amounts — by transponder origin.

For example, going from the western-most end of the Mass Pike to the Interstate 495 interchange toward northern New England using a Massachusetts transponder costs $3.50, but with a transponder purchased elsewhere, it's $4.05.

To travel the full length of the turnpike with an in-state pass costs $7.45, but with a pass from out of state, it's $9.35.

The states with the different toll levels say the solution for travelers is easy — just buy one of their state's transponders and use it while in their state. E-ZPass costs vary among states, but the device usually costs less than $20. Some states add monthly maintenance fees.

If a driver "has a Massachusetts E-ZPass, you can get the discount," said Patrick Marvin, spokesman for the state's transportation agency. "If you have a Maine or Maryland [or any other state] E-ZPass, you get the other rate. A Massachusetts E-ZPass is available no matter where you live."

AAA ran a comparison of the in-state and out-of-state tolls that showed significant differences in pricing.

In an informal 2017 survey of two-tiered toll rates, the AAA foundthat drivers with a transponder issued out of state were charged the cash rate — $8.50 for major New York City bridges and tunnels at the time — rather than the E-ZPass rate, $5.76.

At the Verrazano Narrows Bridge, the E-ZPass rate for drivers from out of town was $17, compared with $11.52 for drivers with an in-state pass.

Overall, the Metropolitan Transit Authority from 2012 to 2016 charged the cash rate to more than 92 million E-ZPass drivers from out of town, the survey found. The greatest number, 70 million, were from neighboring New Jersey.

The next-highest total of MTA E-ZPass out-of-state users came from the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority at 7.7 million followed by those using a Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission transponder at 5.2 million.

While the tolls may have increased since the survey was taken, the disparities remain.

According to AAA, at least eight northeastern states — Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island and West Virginia — have a two-tiered system at least some of the time, for example during rush hour. Delaware, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Virginia do not.

Local tolling agencies also have signed on to discounts for residents.

Drivers who take the Scudder Falls Bridge from the Trenton, New Jersey, area into Pennsylvania will be charged a toll beginning around July 10, the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission announced. E-ZPass is accepted, and drivers who go into Pennsylvania frequently and get the New Jersey version of the pass will get a 40% discount, the agency said.

Elsewhere in the country, some states are moving away from the two-tiered charging system.

Texas, Kansas and Oklahoma, for example, all use the same kind of transponder for electronic tolling. "We have an interoperability agreement," said Rachel Bell, director of business services and customer relations at the Kansas Turnpike Authority. "If you have a transponder from one of those states, you will be charged the same electronic rate" as our in-state customers.

But interoperability doesn't always mean simplicity. Take Florida, for example.

The Orlando area has an "E-Pass, not to be confused with an E-ZPass," said Brian Hutchings, senior communications specialist for the Central Florida Expressway Authority. The E-Pass works only on roads operated by the authority.

If Floridians want to travel on other states' E-ZPass highways, you have to get an "E-Pass Extra," he said. E-ZPass holders from other states can use that on the Central Florida roads.

"You have a lot of snowbirds that come down here, and they had to have two transponders," he said. "Now you can have the convenience of multi-state toll paying with one transponder." Discounts are available for Florida roads with the E-Pass Extra.

However, neither of those two transponders works on the Florida Turnpike. For that, you have to have a "SunPass," he said.

And SunPasses don't work on E-ZPass roads.

Toll roads are becoming increasingly popular, partly because states are reluctant to raise the gasoline tax, the main funding mechanism for road repair and infrastructure building and maintenance at both the federal and state level.

A report by the International Bridge, Tunnel and Turnpike Association showed the number of trips taken by drivers on toll roads increased 14%, from 5 billion trips in 2011 to 5.7 billion in 2015, the last time the association took a survey. The association also noted a 20% increase in electronic tolling during that time.

The Federal Highway Administration, in a separate report, found a 9 percent increase in overall toll road mileage within the United States, from 5,400 miles in 2011 to 5,900 miles as of 2013.

Toll roads themselves are controversial. Critics note that tolls go up consistently and say they are inefficient, citing a 2016 Congressional Research Service report that said that every highway toll dollar costs between 8 and 11 cents to collect, even with electronic tolling, which is more efficient than cash. Collecting the gas tax costs about a penny of every dollar it brings in.

But with infrastructure funding bills stalled in Congress, states are coping as best they can.

Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan, a Republican, this month won approval from the state's board of public works to open bidding by private companies to build and operate toll lanes on the Capital Beltway and an adjoining interstate as part of a plan to relieve growing congestion on suburban Washington, D.C., roads. Under the public-private partnership, the private companies would reap most of the toll revenue.

By JON WEBB
Evansville Courier & Press

A man stands in Beijing's Tiananmen Square on June 5, 1989 – one day after the Chinese government slaughtered scores of pro-democracy protesters. Tanks basically brush against the tip of his nose, but he doesn't back down.

Thirty years on, the man has morphed into a symbol of human strength and resilience. But no one knows his name or what happened to him.

But we do know the identity of the man who captured that iconic image. His name is Jeff Widener. And for a brief period in the 1980s, he lived and worked in Evansville.

As the Arts Council of Southwestern Indiana's Zach Evans pointed out on Facebook Tuesday, Widener was a staff photographer for the Evansville Press from 1980 to 1981.

"Such fond memories of those days," Widener told me via email on Tuesday.

His co-workers had fond memories of him, too. When Widener's Tiananmen Square photo went worldwide in 1989, former Press managing editor Tom Tulley wrote a column remembering Widener as a singular talent.

"He was young, impetuous, a bit off-the-wall, ambitious … and one of the best pure photographers I was ever around," he wrote.

Not surprisingly, Widener rode into town with a solid resume. While working in Nevada, he chronicled the struggles of a 113-year-old Native American woman whose life on a reservation was so horrible that she was forced to live off dog food.

His work here was the kind of stuff any photographer would cover. He shot photos of high school plays, and a pair of Mount Vernon sisters who mowed the grass at cemeteries, among hundreds of other assignments.

After a year in Evansville, Widener accepted a job with The Associated Press. That's how he ended up in the middle of the one of the most horrific events of the 20th century.

In the spring and summer of 1989, protests ignited all over China.

But Beijing was the heart of it. Millions of students and other Chinese citizens swarmed the square at the heart of the capital to demand greater personal freedoms from their authoritarian government.

Widener was there for all of it. Writing for the Washington Post recently, he said he and other AP photographers drew straws to see who would monitor the increasingly tense demonstrations.

"I was the lucky victim," he said.

Riding a bicycle along Chang'an Avenue on June 4, he shot photos selectively and kept his photo gear tucked under his shirt to keep from catching the suspicious eyes of government officials.

Things were peaceful at first, he wrote, but that changed fast.

Around midnight, armored vehicles rolled into the square and started spraying bullets. Widener saw a man rolling on the ground in flames; another man laughing wildly as he clutched a bloody hatchet.

Widener raised his camera to take pictures. That's when a slab of cement rocketed toward his face.

He heard someone cackle from across the street as he folded to the ground, dazed and injured. When he snapped back to reality, he saw his camera busted on the street. If he hadn't been taking pictures, the concrete block would have hit him directly.

The camera was ruined, but it literally saved his life, he wrote.

Others weren't as lucky. No one knows the official death toll, but deaths are assumed to be in the hundreds, if not thousands.

The next day, Widener looked out the window of his 10th-floor-hotel room and watched tanks roll out of the square. That's when he saw the man.

"It's kind of strange, but with all the craziness going on around me, that one man seemed like something normal," he told the Press in 1989. "It wasn't surprising to see someone standing in front of the tanks."

Still dazed from the day before, Widener's hands shook as he raised his camera and snapped away.

The Chinese government has worked for decades to scrub the Tiananmen Square massacre from history. But Widener's work assured that no one will ever forget.

"I was so scared and caught up in the emotion of it all, I almost didn't get that photo off," he told the Press.

"That was the only one that turned out."

Shrewsbury-Windle House birthday gala June 14

The reservation deadline is June 10 at 4 p. m. for the 170th birthday celebration of the restored, award-winning, Shrewsbury-Windle House National Historic Landmark. The gala will be Friday June 14 from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. at 301 West First Street in Madison.

Tickets are $35 per person and reservations are required. Sponsorship level tickets are available at the $65, $125 or $300 levels. Tickets may be reserved through Eventbrite.com or by calling the Historic Madison Inc. office at (812) 265-2967, emailing hmi@historicmadisoninc.com, or going to the office at 500 West Street. Tickets will be held at the door on the day of the event. Proceeds from this fundraiser benefit the Shrewsbury-Windle House.

The festivities will include self-guided tours of the house, live music, a silent auction, and the cutting of a special birthday cake at 7:30 p.m. Hors d' oeuvres and a cash bar will be available. The recently awarded Cook Cup for the Outstanding Restoration of the Shrewsbury-Windle House will be on view for all to see.

The Shrewsbury-Windle House, designed by Indiana's leading early 19th century architect, Francis Costigan, and completed in 1849 is recognized by the U.S. Secretary of the Interior as a masterpiece of Greek Revival architecture. The home was cared for between 1849 and 2009 by the Shrewsbury and Wyatt families, the Walker family and by John and Ann Windle who founded Historic Madison Inc. in the home in 1960. In 2011 the estate of Ann Windle deeded the property to HMI to maintain it as a "historically correct example of architecture for the cultural enrichment of people."

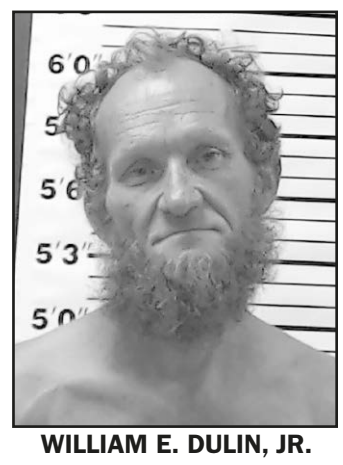
Homeless man charged in alleged sexual assault

A homeless man has been charged with sexual battery and public intoxication after he allegedly grabbed a woman at a city-owned restroom in Madison on Tuesday.

According to court records, William E. Dulin Jr., 53, listed as homeless, was charged with a sexual battery, a Level 6 felony, and public intoxication, a Class B misdemeanor, in connection with an alleged assault at the Bicentennial Park restroom at the corner of West Street and Vaughn Drive.

In a case investigated by Madison Police Officer Brittany Tate, the woman told police that while using the restroom facilities a man grabbed her arm, yanked on it and then grabbed her breast. He then also grabbed the area of his crotch and asking if she "wanted to play a game."



WILLIAM E. DULIN, JR.

The woman identified Dulin, who was found lying shirtless in his large cart containing his belongings about 75 feet away, as her attacker.

Dulin was arrested and taken to the Jefferson County Jail. He tested .075 on the jail's intoximeter device and was jailed.

• Hospital settles

Court records show that in 2007, 30 physicians bought 49 percent of the hospital, which was slated to have 65 beds. When that plan fell short and the hospital ended up with space for only 35 beds, 10 of them operational, owners were forced into bankruptcy in 2010. This caused the landlord, KMCREI, to default on its $21.5 million loan.

When recovery from bankruptcy wasn't possible and new investors weren't found, it was decided Rialto would become the new hospital owner through an affiliate. A June 2014 plan from KMCREI to restructure the company included 20 percent of new membership interest going to four doctors, "in consideration of their ongoing commitment to the hospital and their importance to the feasibility of this plan and the [hospital] plan," according to court records.

One of the four rejected the plan, in part because it violated a law that states insiders and investors can't be given equity without new value being given by them.

At a bankruptcy hearing, counsel for the hospital stated that the "new value" given by the four physicians was that "these four docs provide 75 percent of the admissions to [the hospital] which in fact is then going to pay rent to KMCREI so the building doesn't get foreclosed on."

When that plan was challenged in bankruptcy court, Rialto then gave loans to two of the physicians and allegedly allowed non-payment on them for more than two years.

The Anti-Kickback Statute makes it a crime to knowingly pay or give benefits to cause a person to refer any person to or "...arrange for or recommend any good facility, service or item" covered under a federal health care program. The Stark Law prohibits hospitals from submitting Medicare claims from most physicians who have a "financial relationship" with the hospital.

"The Anti-Kickback Statute, Stark Law and False Claims Act were created to serve as tools for combating fraud, waste and abuse in federally-funded health care programs," U.S. Attorney for the Southern District Josh Minkler said in the release. "This recovery sends the message that health care providers must comply with applicable state and federal laws when billing the United States government for services, or they will face consequences."

The physician who had rejected KMCREI's plan and filed the false claims complaint in federal court will receive more than $600,000, in accordance with the "whistleblower" provision of the False Claims Act.

inches of rain falling, when the normal is 4.26 inches of rain, Dahmer said.

Both months may have seemed wetter than usual, because the number of days that had measurable rain was above average, with 15 days of rain in April and 16 in May, he said.

"What throws people is the number of days we had precipitation that makes it seems like it was high," Dahmer said.

In the last week, farmers had just over two days that were deemed suitable for field work, according to USDA data.

Last week, farmers had less than two dry days to work on planting their crops.

Consecutive rainy days make it difficult for farmers to get out into the fields to get their crops planted, Hendricks said.

Farm equipment gets stuck in mud and farmers must wait for the fields to dry before they can potentially start planting again, he said.

"The ground is so wet, you cannot even drive over it," Hendricks said.

"It hasn't been anywhere near ideal conditions."

The typical planting and growing season for most corn is April 1 to Sept. 1.

Farmers must get any crops they want covered by insurance planted by June 6, Dora said.

Farmers can usually begin harvesting their corn around the first week of September and must get the corn in by the first hard frost or risk losing the entire crop, he said.

"If corn does not reach maturity and we get into a killing frost, it really has no value after that," Dora said.

Farmers who signed up for insurance earlier in the year may still have options if they do not get their fields planted this week.

They could get an insurance payout for not getting their crops in, but it will not be the same as having a successful harvest, Dora said.

"It will give them some relief, but not like having a crop and selling it beyond fall," he said.

Local farmers have been feeling the stress to meet today's insurance deadline to get crops planted, Hendricks said.

Insurance companies will only insure crops that are in the ground by this week, because the likelihood of having a high-yielding crop reduces past this week, Hendricks said.

"This is kind of the schedule that we have been working off of," he said.

In the last weeks of May, corn fields in Johnson County that were normally weeks into growing sat empty and farmers spent hours upon hours in their fields trying to meet the planting deadline.

Some have lost sleep and the worry to get the planting done has been affecting farmers in the region, Hendricks said.

"We had to do all of it a very short period of time, (which) makes it stressful and we have not been getting a lot of sleep," he said.

the two universities doesn't tell the full story.

"There's more underneath the hood going on," he said.

For instance, out-of-state students are charged more and make up a greater percentage of students on Purdue's flagship campus than IU's.

Sejdinaj said it was important to note the average cost of attendance at the Bloomington campus for students receiving gift aid has decreased by more than 10 percent over the past three years. Gift aid refers to financial aid that does not require repayment, such as grants and scholarships.

The board also approved a request to increase out-of-state undergraduate tuition by 3 percent on the Bloomington campus for each of the next two years. Graduate tuition rates vary by program, but Sejdinaj said most were between 0 percent and 3 percent.

A full list of the increases can be found on the IU Office of the Vice President and Chief Financial Officer website: https://vpcfo.iu.edu/_assets/doc/2019-2021-tuition-and-fee-schedule-recommended.pdf

H1 expects up to 8 boats for Gold Cup

Arvin-Sango makes Regatta free to children 14&U

By DAVID CAMPBELL
Courier Sports Writer
dcampbell@madisoncourier.com

The Madison Regatta just got a lot more kid friendly, thanks to a hefty financial commitment from Arvin-Sango.

The Regatta will offer a carnival to go along with the other festivities at this year's 69th running of the race and all children ages 14 and under will get into the race site for free.

It's all due to a sponsorship from Arvin-Sango, which offered to pay for the carnival and then decided to lessen costs for parents by purchasing admission wristbands for children to the race as well.

"This is a really cool thing and this really gives families something else to look forward to," Madison Regatta Vice-President Curtis Chatham said. "We're thrilled that Arvin-Sango has stepped up to the plate to offer this."

The carnival, which will have between 11 and 14 rides for various ages, will be located in the parking lot at the foot of Jefferson Street with a possible overflow into Fireman's Park. It will be open all race weekend. Admission is free but tickets will be required for the various attractions.

The carnival announcement was made at the now weekly general membership meeting of Madison Regatta Inc., which was held at The Boneyard Grill.

Chatham, who ran the meeting in place of president Matt True, also announced that the Regatta had received a $75,000 grant from the state of Indiana for improvements within the race area. The Regatta plans on using that money to upgrade the judges stand by adding a second deck for the media, as well as improving utilities hookups throughout the riverfront.

As for the race itself, the Regatta has received notice by H1 Unlimited to expect up to eight boats to run for the APBA Gold Cup, which will be contested in Madison for the first time since 1980. Seven teams are all but confirmed, including the local U-6 Miss HomeStreet/Miss Madison, the defending national champion U-1 Delta/Realtrac, the U-11 J&Ds, and the U-440 Bucket List Racing. Owner Rob Graham is now expected to bring two boats to the race, his U-12 Graham Trucking and U-98 Graham Trucking, and the Detroit-based U-7 Spirit of Detroit is also expected to be on hand.

The eighth boat is still undecided but the possibility of Miss Madison Racing running a second entry is still on the table.

Those eight boats, along with 10 confirmed Grand Prix World class boats and 14 vintage boats, will fill the pit area. Racing will be on Saturday, July 6 and Sunday, July 7, but a "Free Friday" will be held that will see all classes of boats on the water for testing with no admission for fans. The radio-controlled hydroplanes will also be on the Ohio River on that Friday running laps.

TOUGH CHALLENGE AT CHAMPIONS

Local golfers can't survive course at regional

By DAVID CAMPBELL
Courier Staff Writer
dcampbell@madisoncourier.com

HENRYVILLE — Champions Pointe Golf Club was not kind to either of the boys golf teams from Madison and Southwestern, holding each team to their worst 18-hole scoring of the season at the IHSAA Regional Tournament on Thursday.

Madison, which shot a 319 en route to its eighth-straight sectional title on Monday, managed only a 346 to finish 10th overall. Southwestern fared even worse, finishing with a 367 to place 18th out of 18 teams.

Of the local golfers, only Southwestern senior Hunter Mefford broke 80, finishing with a 78 that still missed the state finals cut by four strokes.

"Champions Pointe is not a course that has been very good to us," Madison coach Chris Conner said. "I'm not sure what it is, but we don't play very well here. Maybe it's the tall rough. We just don't handle it well."

The high scores by both Madison and Southwestern stood in stark contrast to the top scores in what is considered by many to be the toughest regional in the state.

Center Grove, ranked No. 4 in Indiana, won the regional title with a 291 while eighth-ranked Floyd Central fired a 301 and No. 10 Columbus North had a 303 as all three teams earned berths to the state finals.

Center Grove's Alex Heck was the low medalist with a three-under 69 while Franklin's Damon Dickey shot a 71. They were the only individuals to shoot below par on a hot and humid day in Henryville.

Dickey was the top individual to qualify for the state finals and was joined by Bedford North Lawrence's Ethan Stanley and Corydon's Joey Wiseman, who both shot even-par 72s, Bloomington South's Drew Todd with a 73 and Bloomington North's Evan Todd with a 74.

Mefford, who shot a 72 at sectional, was well on his way to a return trip to the state finals before a double bogey on his ninth hole — hole No. 18 on the course — sent him into a downward spiral.

Playing with a bad back that only got worse during the round, Mefford fell to as far as seven-over before collecting a birdie on his next-to-last hole to stop the bleeding.

Mefford's round was indicative over nearly every local player. Teammate Austin Kramer was one under through seven holes but took a bogey on the eighth and a triple on the ninth and never recovered, finishing with an 80. Drew Barron, Madison's No. 1, collected bogeys four of his first five holes and finished with a 15-over 87.

Luke Ommen and Trent Jameison each led Madison with 82s, Barron had an 87 and Landon McDowell shot a 95 to round out the Cubs' scoring. Dylan Eblen had a non-scoring 100.

"Everybody struggled. We just didn't play well," Conner said. "There were a lot of nerves early on and everybody was anxious. And then when you get off to a rough start, you start to think about it more and it just snowballs."

After Mefford and Kramer, Trenton Hadley shot an 87 for Southwestern, Camden Ashby carded a 122 and Billy Tingle had a non-scoring 146.

Southwestern brings back most of its team with Mefford the only senior. The Purdue Fort Wayne sign-

Colts took Okereke despite allegations of sexual assault

By MICHAEL MAROT
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Indianapolis Colts general manager Chris Ballard did his homework on Bobby Okereke. A sexual assault allegation from 2015 didn't scare him off.

Just hours after Okereke's name surfaced publicly for the first time in the case, Ballard told reporters on a conference call he took a hard look at Okereke's past and made others in the organization aware of the accusation before selecting the Stanford linebacker in April's NFL draft.

"When we looked at it and talked to him, it was an incident from four years ago. He was never charged with a crime, he was never disciplined by the university," Ballard said. "He was a team captain, up for the Lott IMPACT award, he graduated with a degree in management and engineering and he's working on a master's. From everything we gathered, we felt it was appropriate to take him."

Okereke has not spoken about the incident since it was first reported by The Fountain Hopper, an independent student-run website at Stanford. The New York Times initially reported on the case in December 2016, without naming the parties involved, and said a university board twice voted 3-2 in favor of the accuser but that no punishment was assessed because Stanford policy required a vote of at least 4-1. The Times also reported the university denied the accuser's request for a third hearing.

Ballard said he learned of the allegation when Okereke addressed it during their first meeting at the Senior Bowl in January.

The Colts, Ballard said, then spoke multiple times with Okereke, contacted Stanford officials and reached out to others close to Okereke to create a more complete picture of the NFL prospect. Ballard said nobody spoke to the accuser or her attorney.

Ballard also made Colts owner Jim Irsay aware of the accusation prior to taking the 6-foot-1, 239-pound linebacker with a third-round pick, No. 89 overall.

"I don't want to sit here and act like we don't have sympathy for both sides," Ballard said, noting that he has three daughters. "It happened four years ago, and because there were no charges and no disciplinary action taken by the university, and because of his track record since, we felt comfortable drafting him."

Okereke recorded 96 tackles for the Cardinal in 2017 and 2018 and was named to the Butkus Award and Bednarik Award watch lists. He also was a quarterfinalist for the Lott Trophy, which is awarded annually to the nation's top defensive player for his performance on and off the field.

The Colts believe Okereke can add depth to an improving linebacker group and perhaps may emerge as a future starter.

"He was very honest about his side of the story and what occurred and how he had to move forward," Ballard said. "It's a very sensitive subject and it's hard, I get that.

Ballard added: "We talked it through and at the end of the day it falls on me."

Calf injury to cost Luck more practice

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Indianapolis Colts quarterback Andrew Luck will miss his third week of offseason workouts because of a strained calf.

Coach Frank Reich would not say whether Luck will return for next week's three-day minicamp.

Reich has said the Colts are playing it safe. He has said Luck would practice and play if the injury had occurred during the regular season.

Reich also announced that center Javon Patterson will miss the entire season after suffering a torn ACL. Patterson was a seventh-round draft pick, No. 246 overall, out of Mississippi.

The Colts expected Patterson to add depth to an offensive line that returns all five starters from a group that allowed a league-low 18 sacks in 2018. Patterson signed his rookie contract May 3.

Colts sign punter to contract extension

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indianapolis Colts have signed punter Rigoberto Sanchez to a contract extension.

Terms were not announced. Sanchez won the job two years ago after signing as an undrafted rookie.

He beat out Jeff Locke, whom the Colts signed as an unrestricted free agent following the 2016 season, and went on to set an NFL rookie record with a 42.6-yard net average on 84 punts.

Last season, he averaged 46.1 yards on 57 punts and finished with a net average of 42.7 yards.

Sanchez also has served as Indy's kickoff specialist the past two seasons. He could have become a free agent following this season.

NCAA moving back men's 3-point line

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The 3-point line is moving back in men's college basketball.

The NCAA Playing Rules Oversight Panel announced this week that the arc will be moved to 22 feet, 1 ¾ inches for the 2019-20 season, matching the international distance.

The change will not go into effect in Division II and III until 2020-21 due to the potential financial impact on schools.

The committee said the line was moved to make the lane more available for drives from the perimeter, to slow the trend of making 3-pointers so prevalent and to create more offensive spacing by requiring the defense to cover more of the court.

The international line was used on an experimental basis in the National Invitational Tournament the past two seasons. Teams attempted 23.1 3-point shots in the 2019 NIT compared to 22.8 in the 2018-19 regular season. The 3-point shooting percentage also dropped 2.2 percent to 33 percent.

The 3-point line was last moved in 2008-09, extending a foot to 20 feet, 9 inches.

The NCAA Women's Basketball Rules Committee approved an experimental rule last month using the international 3-point line in postseason events outside of the NCAA championships in each division.

The panel also approved resetting the shot clock to 20 seconds after an offensive rebound and gave coaches the ability to call live-ball timeouts in the last two minutes of the second half and any overtime period.

Players also will be assessed technical fouls for derogatory language about an opponent's race, religion, sexual orientation or disability.

EKU president to serve on NCAA panel

RICHMOND, Ky. (AP) — The president of Eastern Kentucky University has been selected to represent the Ohio Valley Conference on the NCAA's Division 1 presidential forum.

Michael Benson was chosen at the May 31 meeting of the board of the conference's presidents. His term begins Sept. 1.

The forum assists the NCAA board of directors in governance of Division 1 athletics. Presidents and chancellors are elected from each of the 32 Division 1 conferences and meet four times a year.

Benson recently fulfilled a four-year term as a member of the NCAA Honor Committee, a group charged with selecting individuals to receive the association's highest recognitions.

Benson replaces Phil Oldham from Tennessee Tech University on the forum. Benson has led Eastern Kentucky University since 2013.

College Corruption

Ex-Arizona assistant to serve 3-months

By TOM HAYS
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A former assistant basketball coach at the University of Arizona was sentenced to three months in prison and two years of probation on Thursday for his role in a college hoops corruption scandal.

Before hearing his sentence in federal court in Manhattan, Emanuel "Book" Richardson apologized to the players he coached at Arizona, saying, "I let them down."

Richardson, 46, had pleaded guilty earlier this year to accepting $20,000 in bribes from Christian Dawkins, an aspiring business manager for pro athletes. He and three other assistant basketball coaches at major programs were charged in 2017 with abusing the trust of NBA-bound players by accepting bribes to steer the players to favored managers and financial advisers.

"Instead of prioritizing his student-athletes' best interests, Richardson sought to profit from them, treating the student-athletes that he coached as assets that he could control for his own benefit," prosecutors said in court papers seeking up to two years in prison for Richardson.

At a trial ending with Dawkins' conviction in May, jurors heard wiretap recordings of Richardson bragging how he could deliver potential clients for Dawkins. In one recording, he even suggested that Arizona head coach Sean Miller was involved in a deal to pay eventual No. 1 NBA draft pick Deandre Ayton $10,000 a month to play for the Wildcats.

Prosecutors haven't accused Miller of any wrongdoing, and he has vehemently denied making any payments.

In a letter to the court in the Richardson case, the general counsel for Arizona wrote that the coach's conduct had done serious damage to the school's reputation and to a basketball program "that had previously enjoyed a stellar record of success, on and off the court."

Because of the bad publicity, "the recruitment effort for future players became substantially more challenging," the letter says. The school "is also facing the prospect of potentially significant sanctions and penalties from the NCAA flowing from the unlawful actions involved in this case," it adds.

On Wednesday, Tony Bland, former assistant basketball coach for the University of Southern California, was sentenced to 100 hours of community service and two years of probation in the same case but no prison time.

Chattanooga hires ex-Louisville interim Ward

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Former Louisville interim football head coach Lorenzo Ward is heading to the Football Championship Subdivision ranks this season as Chattanooga's new defensive coordinator.

New Chattanooga coach Rusty Wright announced this week that he was adding Ward to his Moccasins coaching staff.

Ward posted an 0-2 record as Louisville's interim head coach last season after Bobby Petrino was fired. Louisville hired Scott Satterfield away from Appalachian State to become Petrino's permanent replacement with the Cardinals.

Ward had joined Louisville's staff in 2017 as a secondary coach. He was a defensive coordinator at South Carolina from 2012-15 and at Fresno State in 2016.

He previously worked at Chattanooga as an assistant coach from 1994-98 before joining Frank Beamer's coaching staff at Virginia Tech, where he spent the next seven seasons.

Wright said in a statement that Ward "was on the staff when I played here and has coached at the highest levels throughout his career."

ee will get a chance to rest his back over the next week before playing in the Indiana Amateur Championship starting on June 16 at Purgatory Golf Club in Noblesville.

Madison graduates both Barron and Jameison and will look to reload next season as it seeks its 25th sectional crown overall and ninth-straight.

"Drew and Trent have been a part of some really good teams and I was hoping either or both could get out and continue their season but it wasn't meant to be," Conner said. "We're going to miss those guys."

Annie Lane

Dear Annie: My office mates and I enjoy a good prank as a way of keeping things light. Recently, a good friend of mine, "Jimmy," went on an extended vacation with his family. I decided to do a prank I have long wanted to do: put his house up for sale. My wife, "Diana," told me that I would get arrested and go to jail. I laughed it off, as she often says this to me when I am considering a next-level prank.

I listed his home in a local paper, "for sale by buyer," and described "myself" as a motivated seller. I instructed readers to call "my" cellphone. I put "for sale" signs in his yard and even went the extra mile of putting up banners. I was surprised that the neighbors never said a word. Well, as you can imagine, my friend's phone rang hundreds of times while he and his family were vacationing. I thought it was funny, as did my office mates. But my friend did not.

It has been six months since this prank, and I should mention he got two really good offers, and he still won't speak to me. I am hurt, confused, a bit angry, and wondering why on earth he, his wife and his two adult children are so angry. I took the signs and banners down like they asked, but they are still mad. Even my wife is still fuming because she says I ruined his trip. If you ask me, he shouldn't be spending all that money in the first place. What really gets my goat is that my office workers have now turned on me, too.

What's a friend to do?

– Hurting in Prank Town

Dear Hurting in Prank Town: You're lucky your "friend" didn't have you arrested. You seem to be unaware of boundaries or social norms, and you would be well advised to listen to your wife. It is not up to you to judge how your friend spends his money. He has every right to take his family on a nice vacation without having his phone ring off the hook. A vacation is a time to relax and recharge, and all you did, by drumming up a fake sale of his house, is to create stress -- for him, his family and all those potential buyers.

The fact that he received two good offers is none of your business, and it's beside the point.

If your office workers, your own family and the family that you pulled the prank on all think you need to apologize, perhaps it's time to take a look in the mirror. If you still don't see what you did wrong, well, my friend, then you are the clown.

Dear Annie: I was an animal control officer for six years and a pet sitter for 16 years. I just read the two responses to "Missing Out on Friends," and neither one of them mentioned that 95 percent of shelters require that animals that are adopted from them be returned if, for any reason, the adopter can't care for them.

Our local shelter took back two 12-year-old cats they had adopted out as kittens when their owner died and there was no one else to take them. One of them had diabetes! I know because I was the woman's friend and returned them.

So, if "Missing Out on Friends" adopts, then they should make sure the cats could be returned to the shelter if they can't care for them. And then they should let family or friends know about the situation. "Missing Out on Friends" could also set aside some money for their care, if able. An estate planner can help. I know the shelter would appreciate that!

BRIDGE

IS IT GUESSWORK, OR IS THERE A CLUE?

Jessica Alba said, "My theory is that if you look confident, you can pull off anything -- even if you have no clue what you're doing."

At the bridge table, it pays to look confident, especially if you are blatantly overbidding. At other times, you will not be sure whether partner has holding A or holding B. But usually there will be a clue available to tell you.

In today's deal, look only at the West and North hands. Defending against four hearts, West leads the spade ace: four, nine, five. How should West continue?

At trick one, East's job is to signal whether he has the queen, the honor touching the two promised by West's opening lead. If he does, he plays the highest spot-card he has; if he does not, he plays his lowest spade. However, if East started with a doubleton spade, he drops the higher card, playing high-low with a doubleton and planning on ruffing the third round of the suit. But here, how does West know whether his partner has a doubleton or the queen?

There is not so much a clue as there is the desire to defeat the contract. If East started with two spades, and the defense begins with two high spades and a spade ruff, from where will the fourth defensive trick come? The next deal!

Given the dummy, the contract will be defeated only if the defenders take three spades and one heart. West should continue with the spade three at trick two. East wins with his queen and returns the suit. Then West should lead the 13th spade, and East should ruff with his heart jack, which effects an uppercut, promoting a trump trick for West.
